A Climbing Cow.

The Richmond Pantagraph relates the following account of a cow's climbing that is an unheard of attempt: "Last Tuesday morning Thomas Douthitt, the colored liveryman, was awakened by a noise on top of his house. Upon going out to locate the trouble he was surprised to find a cow stretched over the comb of the roof taking in the sights. The cow had been placed in a lot adjoining the house and a large park leading from the edge of the roof resting in the lot. By this route she climbed to her high perch where she spent the night in comparative comfort.

Much emphasis is given to the quick administration of justice, says the Winchester Democrat, by which a man in a county not far away, was safely on his way to the penitentiary in less than six hours after the commission of the crime, but one of our city pastors this week told us of an instance in a Baptist church in Western Kentucky that eclipsed this record. A worthy Baptist minister, of great power but inascible and hasty, was preaching a very earnest sermon when he was interrupted by a couple of young ladies in the congregation who were talking and laughing. He reproved them but in a few minutes the offense was repeated. This made him so angry that he stopped in the middle of his sermon, convened a business session of the church, and had one of the deacons to prefer charges of contempt and disorderly conduct against the offenders. On motion they were expelled from the church when the minister resumed his sermon where he had left off and finished in peace. All this had not occupied fifteen minutes, and is perhaps the quickest trial on record.

An exchange very correctly says: "When Benjamin Franklin wrote 'A penny saved is a penny earned,' I imagine that he did not mean a penny skimmed from our daily living or from our necessities. That is 'a penny saved,' in the best sense; it is a penny stolen from yourself. A penny saved, is a penny rescued from waste. An hour taken from needed sleep, is not an hour saved, but an hour stolen; an hour taken from idle gossip and turned to some good account—that is an hour saved. And it is the same way with our money and our products. There is no economy in self-denial. It is the duty of every man and woman to live the fullest and best life possible; to get the most they can out of life; to nourish the body and mind and soul, and to develop them to the highest possible degree. This can not be done by 'skimping.' A fuller, freer life is what we need. Economy is necessary, but we must not mistake what economy is. We must save the wastes; stop the leaks, but having saved, we must put our savings to some good use, else we are like the miser with his gold, a detriment to society instead of a good.

Mr. W. Q. Covington has a most extraordinary mule, says the Richmond Register. He bought this mule when it was a yearling just forty years ago, when it was two years old he had it broke, and from that day to this the animal has been in constant and continuous service, and is regularly now. The mule is fat, active and strong and shows no signs of its great age.

A Petrified Man.

About ten years ago Rees Davis, Sr. died at his home on Johnson Fork, Magoffin county, and was buried. The body was afterward disinterred and removed to another burial place, and was found to be completely petrified. The features were as perfect as they were the day of the burial.

Rev. W. B. Lykins, of this place, will preach the funeral of Mr. Davis on the second Sunday in this month at 11 a. m. at the Davis homestead. His relatives say the body will be exhumed, washed, dressed and placed in view of the congregation during funeral service. A large crowd will attend the funeral of the petrified man.—West Liberty Democrat.

W. E. Hedlin, exhibited at our office Tuesday some corn of which two ears weighed one pound, nine ounces. This seems nothing uncommon until it is learned that this grew on new ground, and was not planted until the 16th day of June, and was planted in ground that had never been broke up, but was just layed off one way, and only received one plowing and hoeing. It will probably seem strange that such an industrious farmer as Mr. Hedlin is, would grow a crop with such little work, but Will says that owing to his having in such a large crop, and the corn growing so fast, he had not the time to give it the work it should have had. The ground was on a very steep hill side.

Hon. John D. Atkinson.

The gentleman who is the subject of this article, was born in Bath county, Ky., on the 25th day of June, 1859. His father, W. P. Atkinson, was one of the substantial farmers of that portion of the State, and gave to his children such educational advantages as the common and other schools of the county afforded. In 1876 Mr. Atkinson removed with his family to the State of Kansas, where his son, then a lad of sixteen years, completed his education and graduated from the law school at Lamed, in that State. After one year spent in teaching school, and having reached his majority, he in 1880 returned to his native county of Bath, where he continued his vocation of teaching until 1884, when he decided to enter upon the practice of the law. Accordingly he went before Chief Justice Hargis and Judge Pryor, of the Court of Appeals, and was examined and admitted to practice.

In October of that year, he was married to Miss Lucy J. Donaldson, of Bath county, and shortly afterward located at Stanton, where he has since resided, and where he has built up a practice and reputation second to that of no other citizen of the county. Upon his arrival in this county, the office of County Attorney being vacant by reason of death of the former incumbent, he was appointed to that position, and for two succeeding terms was elected to that office by the people in which capacity he gave entire satisfaction.

For several years past, being the oldest practitioner in the county, his advice had been freely sought by the county officials and always generously given. No enterprise having for its object the public good, and the betterment of society has failed to receive his aid and endorsement.

Following the bent of his boy-hood, Mr. Atkinson as his means and opportunities have permitted has engaged in agricultural pursuits. These have naturally led him to the study of the farming interests, and particularly to the laws affecting the welfare of the farming and laboring classes.

For years, one of his contentions has been that the laws regulating the raising of revenue are unequal and unjust, in that corporations and municipalities are allowed to escape their public burdens by favored legislation to the detriment of the general public, and he has allowed the use of his name as a candidate to represent the people of that district to the end of that he might possibly be instrumental in securing a more equitable adjustment of the laws regulating the burdens of taxation.

If elected the farming and laboring interests will have an able and fearless champion. No man in the district is more closely in touch with all the people; and it is not too much to say that no one within its borders is better qualified to represent the voiced interests of the people composing it.

John D. Atkinson is no trimmer—while yielding to all men the fullest liberty in the matter of opinion, he has convictions of his own, and in every contest has been found doing battle for the common people. He is not a politician in the general acceptance of that term, for he would not stifle an honest conviction to please any man or set of men. He always contends for what he believes, and delivers his thrusts with the precision of a Kentucky rifle and drives them home with the force of a sledge hammer. With all his intensity he is broad-gauged and liberal. No man has taken a livelier interest in all matters affecting the welfare of the county and its people.

To the cause of popular education, he has given his most earnest and enthusiastic support. The unfortunate and oppressed have always found in him a sympathizing friend; while the poor he has turned not empty handed away.

The Democratic party of this district has unanimously selected him as its candidate, and confidently presents him to the voters thereof coupled with the assurance that if they elect him that he will to the very best of his ability serve the interests of all faithfully and impartially.—Clay City Chronicle.

Horse shoeing a Speciality

John Miller, of Berkeley county, West Virginia has just sold his apple crop for a little over $20,000. This is the product of thirty-four acres of mountain land, the assessed value is less than three dollars per acre, or $102 for all the orchard. As a side issue Mr. Miller realized between $3,000 and $4,000 from the peach crop. From a much smaller orchard his father sold between $8,000 and $10,000 worth of fruit. Why not some of our farmers plant a large orchard on land that is not now very profitable when such large amounts can be obtained with a small outlay and a little attention and care?

A set of swindlers is said to be working the country establishing agents for the sale of small mills for grinding feed. One farmer in a community is given the exclusive agency and assured that it will make him rich in a short time. He signs what he supposes is a contract to sell the mills, but when he sees it at the bank its a note for collection.

It was an all wise Providence, says and exchange, that created woman after everything else had been finished; otherwise she would have wanted to boss the job.

Daniel Boone Day.

The women of Kentucky are starting a movement to perpetuate the memory of Daniel Boone and nurture in the breasts of the children of the State the gratitude and reverence which is due the man who braved the perils of early days in Kentucky. The movement is directly in charge of Rebecca Boone Lodge, Daughters of the Revolution, which has headquarters in Covington, and it is chiefly Covington women who are identified with it. It is proposed to have a Boone Day in all the schools of Kentucky on October 22, and circulars are to be sent to all of the teachers in the State asking that that day be devoted to telling the pupils of the life and character of Daniel Boone.

It is also proposed to raise the money necessary to restore the Boone monument at Frankfort, which was nearly destroyed during the civil war. H. F. Farney, the distinguished artist; Col. Durrett, the historian, and Mr. Samuels, of Frankfort, have been selected as a committee to take charge of the restoration.—Covington cor. Louisville Post.
